Digital Media Have Unexpected Audiences

It's hard to control who sees the things you share online.

What's funny to your friends might not be funny to your parents, your teacher or someone interviewing you for a job ten years from now.

Once something's online, it's almost impossible to erase it. There may still be a copy on an app's server, or someone you know may have copied it and shared it.

When you share something online with friends, who else might see it? How can you limit access or prevent further sharing?
